In order to deprive an adversary of the use of a line of railway for purposes of traffic--or, in otherwords, to render the line unserviceable--either the entire line, or only portions of it, may have to be temporarily made useless, or utterly destroyed, according to circumstances. In every case, the withdrawal of all unnecessary rolling-stock should be the first measure adopted. Simultaneously with this, all reserves of railway plant, and the most important tools, c., should be removed from the stations, as well as all individuals entrusted with the technical working of the railway; the signals, first the electric, and then the...
